

W. Clark

From: Wallace Fowler <fowler@csr.utexas.edu>
To: W. Clark <whcii@mindspring.com>
Sent: Friday, March 02, 2001 2:15 AM
Subject: Re: Mars Society

Bill,

I think that having your code out there working while you study can do nothing but enhance your reputation. It is probably a very good thing to do.

Keep up the studying.

WF

>Hi Dr. Fowler.

>

>The Mars Society folks have been pressing me to use my trajectory program >for their privately funded mission to Mars. I finally relented and put the >code and technical article (both of which I received formal Copyright >notices from the Library of Congress last week) on my Mars web site. A >fellow with an aerospace software firm in Canada was interested, wanting to >take what I have and do a 3D simulation. They know it's not well tested >yet, but still need something to start with. I said OK, but don't expect >much until after the middle of June.

>

>The URL for my site is <http://get-me.to/mars> or you can try ><http://whcii.home.mindspring.com/astro/genesis.html> if that doesn't work.

>

>I have a large section in the "Enter" link on the opening page with ideas >solicited from my old EM discussion groups. If your design class wants to >email me some ideas I would be happy to put them on the page too. I have a >list of ideas on the "R&D" link on the sidebar.

>

>Don't worry, I'm studying HARD for the exams.

>

>Bill Clark